Supported Decision-Making- A Guardianship Alternative to Consider

Supported Decision-Making is a process that allows people with disabilities to make decisions about their own lives with support from a team of people such as trusted friends, family members and professionals. Supported decision-making is an alternative to guardianship. Guardians make decisions for the person with a disability. However, supported decision-making allows the person with the disability to make his or her own decisions instead of having someone else make them for him or her.

Supported decision-making promotes self-determination, control, and autonomy. It fosters independence. Studies show that individuals who live more self-determined lives experience better life outcomes such as successful competitive employment, integrated community living, friends, better health and enhanced safety.
